

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

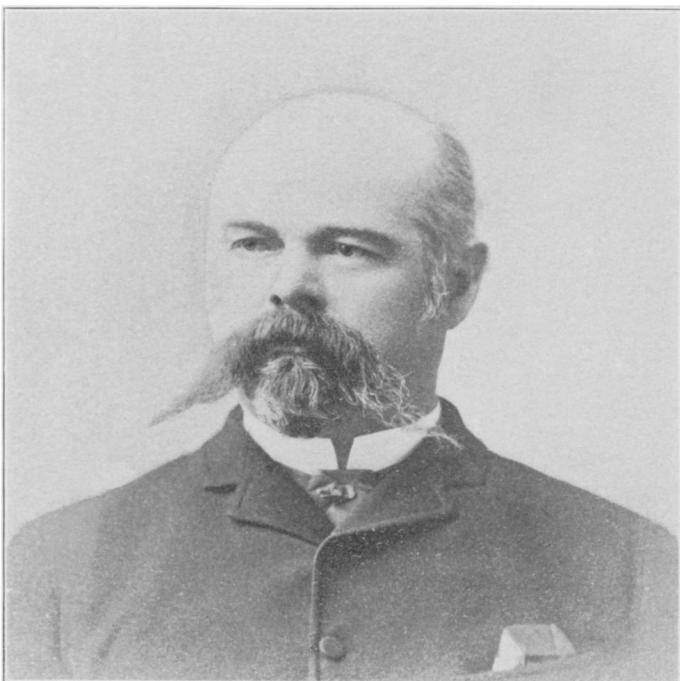

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

MAJOR CHARLES E. BENDIRE.

MAJOR CHARLES E. BENDIRE.

The Wilson Ornithological Chapter mourns the loss of Major Charles E. Bendire, an Honory member, who died at Jacksonville, Florida, February 4th, 1897, of Bright's disease. He had removed to Florida in the hope that the genial climate might stay the progress of the disease, but he died only five days after leaving Washington.

Major Bendire was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, April 27, 1836, came to this country in 1852, and in 1854 enlisted as a private in Company D of the 1st Dragoons, United States Army. After serving for many years with distinction and rising to the rank of Captain, he was retired in 1886 on account of an injury to his knee. In 1890 he again took the field and was brevetted Major for gallant services in fighting the Indians at Canon Creek, Montana, on September 13, 1877. He combined the characteristics of fearlessness with sound sense, always dealing out justice to wrong doers, and always respecting the rights of both Indians and Whites. He was both respected and feared by the Indians, who knew they could expect only justice from the White Chief. He never treated them unjustly.

Of Major Bendire's contributions to science, it is enough to mention his two unequalled volumes of "Life Histories of North American Birds." Never since Audubon, Wilson and Nuttall has any such comprehensive work been attempted, and Major Bendire's extensive field experience and intimate association with nature eminently fitted him to undertake so great a task. It is not too much to say that these two volumes have never been equalled in completeness and accuracy of treatment of the habits of the species discussed. Our loss is the more keenly felt when we realize that we cannot now look forward to the succeeding volumes which he had planned and hoped to finish. These volumes and the collections of the eggs of North American birds in the United States National Museum, of which he was the Honorary Curator, and of which his personal collection donated to the Museum formed so large a part, will forever stand as monuments to his untiring devotion to the cause of science.

The excellent portrait of Major Bendire, which appears as frontispiece in this issue, is by the kindness of Mr. Walter A. Johnson, editor of The Spy, Galesburg, Illinois. It was made about 1884.